

To Whom it May Concern,

There is no question that this presidential campaign has dominated the media regulated by the FCC since this election has been such a closely and hotly contested race since the fall of 2000 and the stories of "hanging chads." I believe that it is a great gift this country grants those who use these media to feel free from political pressure. However, this gift comes with the heavy burden of those employing the media to maintain the great responsibility of demonstrating no bias. This attempt by Sinclair to occupy all of its stations with an anti-anyone documentary is a way for a large corporation with lots of money to flex it's muscle and sway the public. We can not continue to allow this attitude that drives our capitalist society that the biggest dog who barks the loudest wins. This country has ideals that are bigger than greed and those must be held up by the agencies of the government, such as the FCC that walk the line of standing up for both the corporation right and the individual citizen right.
